1.9 Numerical Errors: Examples of common appearing

The final result of a calculation performed on a computer may be erroneous due to various reasons:

- systematic errors in the approach used, e.g. a wrong mathematical modelling
- systematic errors in the program code ("bugs")
- errors contained in input data
- errors due to floating-point arithmetic

Even if the first three were excluded by careful work, the latter cannot be avoided.